President's Report

I'm an academic psychologist. My field is cognitive psychology and perception, but perhaps not surprisingly, I've recently become interested in the psychology of aging. And it's immensely complex. My colleagues list all the ways in which ability declines - many abilities declining from late adolescence or the early twenties. We all know that; no longer can I easily toss a canoe to carry it across a Northern portage between lakes, or hit a softball reliably in the annual family softball game.

However in the tricky area of cognitive ability, memory, or problem-solving, the picture is not so clear. There are several studies that should give us older academics reason for optimism. Most of the data, for instance, suggest that these functions, if they do decline with age, decline less rapidly in those with greater degrees of education. That's us, folks.

The thing that researchers into the many aspects of "intelligence" since the earliest days of its study have focused on is not the averages, but on the variability in the population. But what the media tend to highlight in reports of research is, inappropriately, the averages. The younger we are the smarter we are. Trivial. But wait a minute: one recent study followed two groups of seniors for 20 years - the groups differing in when they were born - different by 16 years. The later-born not only scored higher on some central cognitive measures when the same age as their older peers had been, but the rate of decline was less as well.

THIRD ANNUAL SENIOR SCHOLARS' SYMPOSIUM

First Announcement and Call for Papers

The RALUT Senior Scholars Committee is pleased to announce the third annual Senior Scholars Symposium, which will take place in the Upper Library at Massey College on Thursday April 10 2008.

As last year, registration will begin at 9:00 AM and the Symposium will get underway at 9:30. The two sessions consisting of four papers each will run from 10:00 to 12 noon and from 1:30 to 3:30. Lunch will be in the dining hall of Massey College at 12.15 to 1:15 and there will be a wine and cheese reception at the conclusion of the Symposium.

Active participation by RALUT members is essential to the success of this event. We invite all of you who are currently pursuing research to send an abstract by 15 February either in rtf format by e-mail to merrijoy.kelner@utoronto.ca or john.mcclelland@utoronto.ca; or in hard copy to RALUT, suite 404, 256 McCaul Street, Toronto M5T 1W5. We will contact you by 10 March if your abstract has been accepted.

Papers should be directed towards a well-informed, rather than a specialist, audience and presenters must be able to give their papers in person. After the Symposium all the papers will be printed and distributed to the presenters and to members of the University administration and Governing council. They will also be available for purchase by members of RALUT and others. This publication will not, of course, prejudice the presenters' wish to subsequently publish their work in some other medium.

SPEAKING UP

The Other Doctor Ruth

It sometimes seems as if service providers do whatever they can to avoid providing the services we expect from them. By pushing the right buttons and with a bit of persistence though, they can usually be persuaded to rectify their ways.

Because I'm hard of hearing, I use close captioning when I watch TV. Early in the fall, I noticed that I was not getting close captioning on any programs from TVO, CBC or Bravo. The service department of my provider, Bell ExpressVu claimed that any lack of captioning was due either to the way in which I had set up my TV or because the broadcasters were not transmitting the captioning.

When I learned that captioning for the programs I wanted to watch was available through Rogers, I considered switching. I did not do so because I would need to pay for the change in wiring and because Rogers had an equally bad track record for customer service.

Instead I reported the situation to Bell's Executive Office. I also notified the broadcasters and on a suggestion from TVO, notified the Canadian Radio and Television Commission (CRTC). Suddenly, Bell acknowledged that, indeed, there was a problem.

I got two e-mails from the Executive Office, each one suggesting a different source of the trouble. The approximate time line to rectify the first was two months, the second, indefinite.

Again I complained to CRTC. Surely this was too long to wait for the company to provide accommodation for hearing disabled customers.

The next day, I received a call from a service manager. "Did you file a complaint with CRTC?" he asked.

"Yes, I did." I replied. "I was tired of the lies and stalling from the service department."

"Well let me tell you," he said. "We have engineers working around the clock checking each one of our 400 channels. By midnight, you should be receiving close captioning on all channels." To ensure that I would get a prompt reply and bypass voicemail hell, he gave me his own cell phone number to use if I had any further issues.

By the next day, I did have the captioning he promised. I sent one more e-mail to the Executive Office.

"What about all the money I spent on service I didn't receive?"

Their response? "As a goodwill/customer service gesture for the inconveniences endured" a rebate of three months programming charge.

So you see, it's true. The squeaky wheel does get the grease!

Is there a lesson here? Only that we all age. We age at different rates and differently in different aspects of the things we do. We are fortunate as academics; either because of our genes, or because of the lives we have lived, to retain cognitive function on average (watch that generalization!) more successfully than the general populace.

We encourage all RALUT members to plan on attending what has regularly been an intellectually stimulating and thoroughly interdisciplinary day. Please e-mail or call the RALUT office by 1 April to indicate that you will attend (ral.ut@utoronto.ca, 416-978-7256). There will be a charge of $20.00 to help defray the cost of lunch and the reception.

John Dirks, Merrijoy Kelner, and John McClelland, on behalf of the Senior Scholars Committee of RALUT.

RALUT Members' Publications, Service and Honours

The Senior Scholars Committee has decided on the following way to provide members with a list of publications and honours for the coming years:

Publications (for specified academic year)

Books

- For book chapters give retiree's name, et al. if appropriate, chapter # and title, pages, publisher, city and date.
- If single author of a book as above for chapter
- If editor of a book, as above for chapter

Articles in peer-reviewed and other journals

- Indicate first and last names of retiree (if co-author indicate by 'et al' even if retiree is not first author) followed by title of article (no acronyms). End with name of journal citing year; volume #: pages (first to last page separated by a hyphen). Use punctuation as indicated

Other

- For articles in newspapers, magazines, bulletins etc give retiree's name (indicating 'et al.' if appropriate), title of article, name of publication, date and page number
- Describe briefly conference papers, exhibits, translations or performances.

Public Service (for specified academic year)

- Membership in working groups, boards, advisory bodies to government, national associations or academic institutions.
- Addresses to academics or the lay public
- University service

Honours (for specified academic year)

- Invited Membership/Fellowship in distinguished organizations (eg: Royal Society)
- Public recognition (as in Order of Canada) or other indications of merit institutionally awarded.

Distribution

- As an annual stand-alone Appendix to the Reporter to facilitate distribution to relevant recipients; mailed with a regular issue of the Reporter.
- Ralut Website

Format

- Individuals in alphabetical order stratified by category (publications, service and honours). Thus one individual may be found in any of five categories.
- Names should be accompanied by current or previous departmental affiliation

Action Plan

The REPORTER will solicit this information for the academic year 07/08, in the late spring of 2008. The deadline for submission to the RALUT office by mail or email should be Sept. 30, 2008.

CALL FOR PRESENTATIONS

AROHE's 4th Biennial Conference

Retiree Organizations in Higher Education: Values and Opportunities

October 24-26 , 2008

University of Southern California -- USC, Los Angeles, California

AROHE's biennial conference brings together AROHE member organizations, university administrators, and others from colleges and universities across the United States and Canada to explore trends and models of retirement in higher education.

We are seeking members of retiree organizations, those interested in organizing a retiree group, retired faculty and staff, institution administrators, and others who can provide experience, insight, research, and information of interest to retirees, pre-retirees, higher education institutions, and others that serve these populations.

We encourage a variety of presentation types including those that are of a practical "how to nature," focused on timely issues, describe innovative and successful practices, or present relevant inquiry and research. Varied formats are welcome and may include describing a program or activity at a roundtable, an issue focused panel discussion, or a formal presentation. Ideally, the presentations will help conference participants to increase their organization's value and create opportunities for retirees and retiree organizations on their campus.

AROHE reserves the right to decline proposals and/or adjust the length or format of the presentations to best serve the purpose and goals of the conference.

Member organizations are invited to bring and display printed materials (registration at the conference is required). Others may purchase exhibit space, with a 20% discount to Affiliate Members.

Remember! March 28, 2008 is the deadline to submit your proposal

Information about the conference & copies of the application form are available on the AROHE website <http://www.arohe.org>

The 2007 RALUT Monograph - now available on our website

Papers presented at the March 29, 2007 Senior Scholars Symposium were assembled to produce a monograph, printed last fall. After distributing copies to a targeted audience including the presenters themselves, appropriate individuals at Simcoe Hall, the Chancellor, the Master of Massey College, and department heads associated with the presenters, we have received very positive feedback for this attractive publication.

Readers of the Reporter can download the monograph as a pdf from the RALUT website. A few copies of the printed version will be available at the AGM for a nominal sum of $5.00.
